tion, after office hours. He should vote for the resolution.

Mr. CAMERON agreed with the spirit of the resolution, but thought that it should be amended so that it should not include members of the Civil Service with limited salaries of from $1,000 to $200 per year acting as directors or officers of friendly and building societies, whose meetings were held after office hours; and he did not think that desirable.

He should vote for the previous question.

Mr. LEARY agreed with the previous speaker. HEARY thought that the civil servants should not be excluded from the benefits of the benefit, temperance and intelligence building societies after office hours. As the resolutions were now framed he considered that they should be amended from doing so, and if the Columbia

Secretary would withdraw his motion of the previous question, he would move the addition to the resolutions the words "after office hours" and agree to them amended in that form.

Mr. ROBERTSON said he was willing to withdraw his motion.

The previous question was withdrawn by leave of the House.

Mr. PARKES said it appeared to him that there was no objection to the resolutions besides those stated, and that was that it was a rarely desirable and might lead to great deal of inconvenience, if members of the Civil Service especially influential members, should be found active in mixing up in commercial affairs at all. And while it should not be dispensed to say that Civil servants should give up all their privileges as members of society and should not act in associations with their fellow citizens. In many respects; still he thought nothing should be done to encourage them in any trading pursuit or any commercial enterprise, and especially in affairs that afterwards would be likely to do harm to the State. He thought that the Government might have to do with them in some way or other, but that they should be left to their own capacity. He thought the result on would be better if they were left to their own devices. He thought that the Government should express an opinion, as they might rest assured that the Government would see that it was carried into effect. He moved, as an amendment, the omission of the words after the word "House" in the first resolution, and with a view to insert the following words:—"It is undesirable that any person in the employ of the Government should be allowed to act as director or auditor of any bank or other commercial company during office hours."

Mr. NICHOLSON: He does not think it was desirable to add it to the "during office hours," for the reason that it really does not prevent them from acting as bank directors during the day. He would like to see the life of a man as a Civil servant should be allowed to hold such office with Ministers of the Crown, who were but Civil servants, at the highest degree, were not allowed to hold it. The present Treasurer retired from the position of bank director when he took office. He believed it was contrary to the Constitution Act that Ministers of the Crown should hold the positions of bank directors.

Mr. ROBERTSON: No, it was against a resolution of the House.

Mr. STUART thought there were in danger of overlooking certain points on this subject. If the ~~y~~ were to decide to do this, they would have to consider the following points:

There might be any way connected with any company, the might go further and dictate what they should or should not do. Were they to deny those gentlemen the special rights whatever? Were they going to save the Civil servants should not interest themselves in the welfare of the neighborhood in which they lived, that they should not take any interest in a friendly institution or a church or in any movement for the benefit of their fellow creatures? [Mr. DIBBS: Those are not commercial pursuits.] Purely private harm was there in a commercial purchase more than in any religious purchase. He could not understand why religious people might be so down on the Civil Service. He was during office hours, but what possible harm had this House to dictate what they should do afterwards? It seemed to him to be an monstrous

They were proposing to deal with the life of the sailor in a way which would not tend to raise the Civil Service bill, but rather to lower it. He trusted that if the resolution was carried at all, it would include the limitation office hon. member.

Mr. COHEN did not think they ought to carry this desire to dictate to the Civil servants to the length to which the hon. member for Osnaburgh would probably like to go. So long as the Civil servants decided to support the same principle as the public servants, they might do as they liked as far as the Government were concerned. He did not think the amendment went far enough. It would limit the companies in which Civil servants might act as directors. He did not know whether a mining company could be called a common carrier company. Then there were companies for the manufacture and sale of articles, such as Kerosene. He thought the spirit of the resolution was right, but it would be better to leave out the word "commercial," and simply prohibit the servant from taking part as auditors or directors of public companies, if doing so would take them from their public duties. He did not see why they should prohibit them from taking part in public companies so long as they did not do during office hours.

MR. LATHAM suggested the omission from the amendment of the word "commercial."

Mr. PARKES consented to the omission of the word.

The House also consented to this amendment.

Mr. McLEHON replied. He admitted that the Government had no claim upon the public officers except during office hours.

Mr. STEVENS presented a petition, but its purport was not audible in the gallery.

YANKO CREEK RESERVE.

Mr. McILHONNE moved: "That, in the opinion of this House, the Yanko Creek reserve, occupying as it does about 120,000 acres of the finest land in the colony, is very early decreed to the settlement and for the progress of the colony, as it debars both of population and the formation of permanent houses, though being locked up from

be a conditional purchase, thus obtaining a first right to be of people from settling on the land; that, in the opinion of this House, the whole of, or greater part of, this reserve should be cancelled, and opened for settlement on the same conditional purchase. 2. That the said reserve be commuted and cancelled by address. 3. That the said reserve be commuted and cancelled by address. His Excellency the Governor, the members of the Executive Council, and the members of the House, were of opinion that he had at all times raised the question in the present mode of procuring reserves for agricultural or timber purposes, when there was no either way to reserve nor timber on the land. And reserves were made, and it often made to bar out free selectors. Although it was often said that improvements were not allowed to be made upon reserves, great improvements were made by many of them; and when the reserves were cancelled, the improvements were lost.

Where it would be found that in consequence of the various claims, the land would have to go to auction, the agent said that those who had the right to the land should be heard with regard to the particular reserve mentioned.
The results of the hearing were admitted that the gentlemen directly interested were entitled to some consideration for the sale, but they had made up their minds to improve their runs providing a water supply. He heard various amounts named, but he thought those gentlemen laid out about £5,000.
They had had the land reserved for 10 years, and he had allowed to occupy it in a manner in which freehold would not have been allowed to occupy it. There was a single road through it. Roads had been made to the boundary, but persons had had to travel the six to seven miles to water, whereas if there had been a road a few miles from the boundary, it would have been a through fast roads. He did not think it right that there should have been this great tract of country, representing ninety-two miles of frontage to a creek, by one mile wide of it. He had no hesitation in saying that if land, instead of being reserved from sale, had been thrown open to selection it would have brought the ordinary something like £200,000 or £300,000, instead of the £100,000 which the leases paid. He thought the members must admit that the system of reserves had become a monstrous system. He did not think squatters knew the power they had until the last three or four years. But now they had met with a great sale. The Government had been in the habit of buying mineral lands, which had been made use of, and which he was sure had been the means of putting a great deal money in the pockets of some members of this House. The cost of the reserves, the cost of the losses of the reserves, was very little, as the survivors who got the reserves at the end of the war were pretty well bought by the I-cesses. When a man selected a portion of this land, the first thing a lessee was to apply for a reserve: a surveyor was sent to the land and the Government very willingly granted the reserve. Many reserves were applied for under the representatives of the Government, and the reason was that the Government thought that they were required for the purpose of securing timber or water, when in fact there was no lack of timber: a drop of water was enough, and the reason for the application was to enable the lessee to secure their land at a nominal price, and then in the selectors so as to come to them to sell out. Would he, members seated in this Chamber, be prepared to do this? Would they be prepared to say to a man: "You have a reserve of land, and you have to pay for it year by year? He would trust the enormous power reserving our public lands from sale and selection to man, for it enabled the lessee to so improve the reservation that when the day came for the prohibition to be taken off the land, the selector could not get an inch of the reserve because the improvements of the selector threw the land into his hands. The power of the power that the selector had little chance of saying anything against what with half a million acres. It had been said that late Minister for Lands had made more reserves than present Minister had. [Mr. PIDDINGTON: Yes.] It was nearly three times as long in office. More shame to him that he should be so long in office as to have so many reserves to be made. The manner in which the reserves had been made might account for the liberty in which wealthy men came forward and, unasked, to Liverpool Plains, be many times as much worth occupying, and how what the selectors had to expect the infinite number of ways in which they were persecuted by the lessees of the runs. With reference to the Yanco Creek reserve, the land had been worth £20 an acre, and it was occupied for three farthings an acre. The land." He wanted to see the country first. "Thousands of the men who would go upon land sufficient to graze five hundred to 2000 sheep; who would bring up a respectable family, and who would form the nucleus of a yeomanry population, and who would be found in America, and in England, Ireland, and Scotland."

Mr. GARRETT said he had expected some more specific reasons from the hon. member in favour of the proposal. He would not insist on the question as to whether the large tract of land was to be sold, or to be let without any conditions, be revoked and thrown open to public sale. He should have explained for what reason the reserve was granted in the first instance, and how the hon. member would have been able to get the crown lands in the large land grant. He had incurred a very large expenditure in providing purchase the portions of the reserve so improved. (Mr. ALLEN: Is this a conditional purchase?) The answer was that the Government was not going to improve, or to pre-empt lands, which had been appropriated, from standing in the way of settlement by means of conditional purchase. The hon. member had made a mistake in his second question. He had asked for the hon. member's opinion. He said in reply that what was the hon. member's opinion. He said in almost every pastoral, except the power of the people in taking up the public lands of the country. Up to the present time, during the last 10 years, the hon. member had been the real adviser in the matter. He said in the latter part of the year 1855, that at that time the main object which the Colonists the reserve had been conditionally purchased, and other portions had been purchased by virtue of the improvement made, namely, the dam. A plan had been to separate water from the reserve, and the dam was to be constructed. The reserve could be revoked. In his opinion it was not desirable to make a dam to break the whole of the reserve into sections. Whatever portions were made should be made as units, and should not to any large extent be made at 27 ft. or 28 ft. above the back lands, but should be made at 20 ft. above the back lands to the waters of the river, for the benefit of those who might buy back lands.

MR. DAY: The back lands did not require it.

MR. GARRETT: That was the allegation. In case the back lands were to be given, the sections to have a dam, a road, and a market, would be a good thing.

member would

his bill,
or, if he

Mr. DUNLEY (Hartley) disagreed with the above resolution that the free selectors would benefit most from the reserve. He believed that the selectors would benefit most from the reserve in reserving large tracts of country, such as that at Yank Creek, and if they kept it reserved until there was a greater population in the country than there was at present, the selectors would benefit more than at times the amount it would realize if it were now offered for sale. Besides there was sufficient land for sale without canceling these reserves. It was a misconception to not sympathetic with the mores of the revolution in the straits of abuse leveled at the squatters for injuring the free selectors. The squatters had merely taken advantage of defects in the law to get reserves, and to improve them, not with the intention of making a fortune, as the selectors had. He had the free selector. He imagined that this selector reserved included a tract of land exceeding 700 square miles, and if the description he gave was correct, he forwarded to him was correct, the Squatting Commission had been deceived. The reserve, as he had mentioned, was 17,500 acres. It might well be called a private reserve; and he was only surprised that he had before now some motion had not been made for its revocation. It appeared to him to be a very large tract of land, and he was not sure that it was not a very large tract of land.

incurred during their fourteen years' lease. They were gentlemen to be allowed to pass the public lands of the colony as only a few years later but afterwards for eleven years, because these gentlemen had had this reserve in their possession since 1865. He thought the matter might be for the House recommended by every consideration, and that in the future of dealing equitably with the public lands of the colony. Why, he asked, was not this reserve revoked by the Government? The Secretary for Lands had not ventured to say the land suited to agriculture, or that it was not a good one suited to agriculture, or that it was practically a royal domain, but that it was practically a royal domain, the great charter of the free-selector, to the extent of the reserve. He thought that the possession for eleven years foresters to have the eyes picked out by squatters, and the tree selectors not to have the chance of settling on the land at all. It appeared to him there was something very suspicious about this matter, and he was sure that the squatters could hardly be so stupid as to make a mistake that would be so disadvantageous to the present motion. He (Mr. Piddington) then presented a petition from the influential persons of Jerilderie, a township on the reserve, in which they requested the Government to consider the petition and to revoke the decision. Until they were able to do this, it was difficult in the way of the tree selectors. The petition was, the balance of testimony was in favour of the revocation. Did the hon. member mean to say that eleven years was not sufficient time for the squatters to have possession of the land? The hon. member said that he was not sure, but he thought so, and he thought that he would like to wish to prevent the tree selectors from having the land at all.

bit of the land. He could understand the townsfolk opposing the revocation of this reserve if they were going to bring in a bill to abolish free selection, but if no action being the law of the country it should not be interfered with. He was here to support one class as much
